In the Superior Court, Special Term, in the case of Wm. McKiuley against the American Exchange Each, the following opinion has been rendered by Judgo McCunn. The opinion states the facts: This is an action for damages for defacing a note by the paying teller of the bank writing on the face thereof the words "payment stopped" in pencil as an answer to a domand for payment on the day it became due. It is domitted in the complaint that the writing complained of was made on the day of the maturing of the note. The sydence is that the day previous to its maturing, payment had been stopped; so that we have the indisputable that on that day (the day it was due), the character of the note was fixed, and subsequent purchasers must also it subject to all equities. The writing on the face ind not in any way change the condition of the parties to he instrument or diminish its value. It was the record of fact which any purchaser and a right to know; and the spreadment of which if it had not been so reorded, would have been a fraud on such surchaser. The writing of the words "payment stopped" in a note payable at a bank simply announces the interorder of the maker that his funds in that bank shall not be orded, would have been a fraud on archaser. The writing of the words "payment stopped" as a note payable at a bank simply announces the intention of the maker that his funds in that bank shall not be pelled to the payment of the paper, and does not necessarily discredit the note nor import that he will not protect the first and the payment of the paper, and does not necessarily discredit the note nor import that he will not protect the first at some other place, especially when we take no consideration that the defendant's bank were merely he agents of the maker, and as such agents could not be need as long as they disclosed their principal. This is a sell-established rule of law. Again, the indorsement in pencil of the words complained of does not affect the liability of the maker and indorser. Destroying or deficing a written contract does not affect the liability of the parties to it. Had the bank even destroyed the note, the remedy of the helder would not have been affected in the felightest degree, and even their means the bank, and to entitle them to recover, they had only to prove its destruction and contents. This is the doctrine laid down in Edwards on Bills (302, 203), and adhered to through all the books. The instant payment of the note was demanded and refused, it was dishouted the note was demanded and refused, it was dishouted the note was demanded and refused, it was dishouted the note was demanded and refused, it was dishouted the note was demanded and refused, it was dishouted the note was demanded and refused, it was dishouted the note was demanded and refused, it was dishouted the note was demanded and refused, it was dishouted the note was demanded and refused, it was dishouted the note was demanded and refused, it was dishouted the note was demanded and refused, it was dishouted the note was demanded and refused, it was dishouted the note was demanded and refused, it was dishouted to the note was demanded and refused, it was dishouted to the note was demanded and refused, it was dishouted t words were never written upon it. And as the value of the instrument or its assignability was not affected by the act of the defendant in marking on the note, the damage can only consist in giving notice to an intended purchaser that the maker had stopped its payment. Now apart from all other considerations, good faith and common honesty would have required the plaintiff to disclose to any i purchaser that payment had been stopped as soon as that fact was communicated to him, and it would be stretching the rule, indeed, to held the defendant liable for giving a note which common honesty required the plaintiff himself to give. There is another reason why this plaintiff cannot recover. The plaintiff seatiment is that he purchased the note in good faith before it was due. This perfected his right of action against the makers and indersers, who were, upon his own aboving, perfectly solvent at the time the note came due, and continued so long after; and plaintiff, not having exhausted his remedy in this respect, this action must fail. The whole theory in favor of a recovery in this case would seem more like a broad joke than a serious argument, when you reflect that the plaintiff could have removed the marks. They were simply pencil-marks, and might have been taken off in the casest possible manner. If the defendant had his right to place them there, the plaintiff clearly had a right to remove them. Judgment must be ordered for the defendant. The plaintiff in the case of Hattle Leland agt. Talinferro brought suit to restrain the enforcement of a chattel mortgage on furniture, on the ground that her purchase of the furniture and the giving back of the mortgage were all parts of an agreement for the purpose of keeping a house of prostitution, and she was to pay for the furniture out of the profits of the business. An injunction having been granted ex parte, the case came up on motion to dissolve the injunction as to che defendant. Judge Barbour in his decision disregards the special grounds urged for that defendant, b aintiff's statement to be true, the sale and were both probably void as against public under the maxim in pari delate option est condesies, the Court will not aid either party to a lisgraceful agreement either to enfore or prevent its en-oregment. On the 9th of December last, Charles Corbin On the 9th of December last, Charles Corbin called on Mr. Thomas E. Dillon, at No. 74 Wail-st., and giving the name of George W. Elder, stated that he was employed by the Old Dominion Steamship Company, and that he had been deputed by the officers of the Company to purchase a handsome chronometer watch, which was to be presented to the captain of the steamship Isase Webb. A number of chronometers were shown him, and Corbin finally selected one, valued at $250. In payment for this he gave a check for that amount on the National Park Bank, drawn by George W. Elder, in favor of Mr. Dillon. This was found to be worthless, and it is also alleged that the representations of Corbin were false. Corbin was yesterday arrested by Detective McCord, and, on the complaint of Mr. Dillon, was committed by Justice Dowling, of the Tombs Police Court, to await an examination.

lishment of the testimony of the New-York Central direction, added to the rumors of the passage by the lower House of the Illinois Legislature of the fare bill, and the active demand for Imoney, had the Itendency to cause helders to sell. The declaration of the scrip dividend on

Central, and the promises held out that the same course would be taken with the Western Roads demoralized the bear element so that there is little, if any, short interest in the market. The bulk of the speculative stocks are now held in a few hands, and on any attempt to sell a sharp break follows, which, if not checked by the cliques, would run into a panic. The contest ifor the various Western Roads, and the consequent large advance in prices, has caused the old holders to sell out. Some five or six roads, whose united capital amounts to fully $100,000,000, are now controlled by one combination, who aim to contro cost. This fact has been much to the damage of business on the street, the older operators having retired from the contest, foreseeing an inevitable collapse in the future should any financial disturbance occcur to cause these heavy blocks of stocks to be placed upon the market.

The temper of the Western people appears to favor a re-striction upon the rates of freight upon their roads, and throughout the Winter. This action is taken to check the desire to water stocks by scrip dividends, which appears farmers are unwilling toppay the high rates, now that the roads are earning so much money for their projectors, and argue that a reduction should take place that would still pay the reasonable demands of the capital invested, the past. New-York Central was 'the center of interest;

We have had another week of speculative excitement in all the cotion markets of the country. Prices have further salvanced, and the cestrol of the cotion trade is, for the present, in the hands of speculators. Whatever may be the result of the season's campaign, so far as speculators are concerned, the planters of the South are resping a rich reward of the past year's labor, and are getting in a position of independence and freedom from debt such as they never enjoyed before the war. The area to be planted in cotton this Spring will be greatly increased, and if we are lessed with a good season a large increase over the present crep will be the result.
